Top Story (Dennis) (a1)

Rise Of The Synths is going online.

From our friend Forged in Neon comes news that the producers behind Rise of The Synths will stream the documentary online since most film festivals are cancelled. From May 29th for a limited time (24 hrs), you'll be able to watch the film online, as well as get a chance to participate in a live Q&A with the director and special guests such as OGRE and Mecha Maiko. Tickets will be announced in the coming days and it will be hosted by Vehlinggo.

California artist Terrordyne has released a new album called “High Tech Low Living”, and it features some remixes by artists such as Wraithwalker, Starfarer
Here’s a song from the album. This is Lunatic by Terrordyne, here on NFM.

Weather (a2)

It's an Automatic Call for milder weather and oh boy could we use a break. Plan for some Purple Sunshine tomorrow with only a few Runaway clouds. After tomorrow, all you Synthians will be Counting Stars all the way into Sunday. This isn't The Calm Before The Storm, as this weekend, plan for temperatures around 69 degrees (that's around 21 degrees C in London), perfect to go Sleepwalking!

This Just In

In Search of Tomorrow, the documentary about 80's SciFi, has been fully funded on Kickstarter. These are the same producers who brought you In Search of Darkness (no idea why they don't mention In Search of the Last Action Hero), and once again they are partnering with NRW for the soundtrack. The doc will feature interviews with icons from the 80s sci-fi movie scene as well as a killer soundtrack from selected synthwave artists.

German artist Vector Seven has dropped a fresh album called Soullkiller. Here's a track from the album called "Melodism", here on NFM.

In other news

Our friend Kaarin Zoe Lee has reminded us that Outland Recordings has started a new radio show every two weeks starting today, hosted by Stu himself on CMF Radio London.

Speaking of Outland Recordings, the game Retro Drive is out, featuring a soundtrack from Outland and related artists. Currently available on IOS, and new levels are being added all the time. They will be showcasing the game tomorrow on World Game Night (free tickets available on EventBrite). Michael Oakley and Ollie Wride are collaborating on a song for the game, and we should mention that KZL has a special show on Nightride this Thursday night at 9PM EDT with guest Michael Oakley himself.

Oooooh... The 80s guy has been remonetized and also, in case, 24/7 streaming Darksynth radio!
